

1. Professional Documents of a Teacher

Teachers utilize different documents during school teaching experience. These include the official school curriculum, subject syllabus, scheme of work, lesson plans and records of work.

1.1. Curriculum

This is a national document where a syllabus for a specific subject is derived. Teachers must read and understand the curriculum at national level for them to link its content to what is in the syllabus for their specific subject area. The curriculum is designed and developed by the Ministry of Education and is therefore a policy document which schools are expected to implement.

1.2. Syllabus

This is a national document where specific subject content in form of objectives and topics are contained and these are usually in a suggested sequence based on logicity and levels of difficulty. In the Zambian situation this document is designed and developed by subject specialists commissioned by the Ministry of Education and is, therefore an official document of the Ministry and the teachers are expected to follow it in their teaching.

1.3. Scheme of work

This is a plan of topics to be covered in a term for the purpose of orderly and systematic teaching. It is extracted from the language syllabus detailing what to be taught in a term or week. This plan is a product of the teacher, unlike the curriculum and syllabus. The importance of the scheme of work is that it guides the teacher and department on what to teach in which week. It also helps sections and departments to share components to teach and in case of absence of a teacher, the substitute teacher is guided on how to proceed. It also helps in establishing which components have been covered or not. The details of an ideal scheme of work are given below:

week	Topic/subtopic	outcomes	Teaching/learning experiences	Teaching/learning resources	references
2	Tenses ▪ Ciindi caino ‘Present Simple Tense’ ▪ Ciindi caino cizumanana. ‘Present Continuous Tense,	By the end of the week, PSBAT: use tenses correctly both in spoken and written. 3	Kufwiinsya cibalo Summary ▪ Note summary ▪ Prose summary Kubala kawiiwi Comprehension ▪ Reading comprehension	By the end of the week, PSBAT: Write both note and prose summary Answer both inferential and factual questions	Note making Discussing Group discussions	▪ Chalk ▪ Board ▪ Chart showing stages of summary	Sitwe (2015) Summary Skills. Lusaka: UNZA Press.

Lesson plan

This is a plan of work to be covered or done in a particular lesson. It is extracted from the scheme of work. The lesson plan is important because it helps the teacher to be organized and run the lesson smoothly. It also helps the teacher to focus on the content to be covered and the way it should be taught thus avoiding irrelevance

A lesson plan helps to prepare and assemble teaching and learning resources. It also helps to contextualize in advance the teaching strategies and methods to be used in a particular lesson. Lesson plans also help to select and design appropriate assessment methods. In the event that one teacher has an emergency, another teacher can take over to teach the lesson using the same plan.

In summary, advantages of a lesson plan include:

- ❖ It helps with sequencing and orderliness of lesson activities
- ❖ It helps with planning for lesson activities, techniques, methods to use in the lesson
- ❖ It helps with selection of lesson resources such as text to be books to be used
- ❖ It helps with planning and selection of teaching aids
- ❖ It helps enhance teacher confidence
- ❖ It helps with anticipating of potential difficulties that learners may encounter
- ❖ It helps with smooth teacher substitution in the event of the subject teacher being absent.

The details found in a lesson plan are as follows:

a. Biographic data section (bio data section)

This section contains details of the school, teacher, subject, class, time, objectives, references and materials to use in the lesson.

b. Introduction Section (Teacher expedition)

This is where the topic of the lesson is presented, and rule explanation and any other concept related to the topic is explained. New concepts and phrases are explained under this section. The lesson may start with revision where the previous topic is related the new topic, or it may start straight with the new topic of the day by creating a situation.

c. Development Section

This is a practice stage for learners having understood the topic from the introduction. Activities under this section may include group discussion, debate, oral exercise, quiz, written exercise and homework. Anything that can help learners internalize the teaching point by practicing falls under this section. It involves development of the teaching point in the mind of the learners.

d. Conclusion

This is where summing up of the content learnt in the lesson is done. Conclusion is divided into cognitive closure and social closure. Under cognitive closure, the teacher asks learners what they have learnt from the lesson and learners respond. Teachers should avoid summarising the lesson on their own. Learners must be involved. Under social closure, the teacher praises the pupils for their participation in the lesson and encourages learners who had difficulties during the lesson so that they go home motivated.

e. Evaluation

This is based on whether the objectives of the lesson were achieved or not. Details should be included on whether the lesson was successful, or it should be retaught.
